

The next day was another warm affair as we picked our way along the coast, stopping for another pile of rock where we were chased by the local sheep! Then it was onward through Ronneby and on for a lunch of steak sandwiches at Karlshamn. We had another puncture before we cleared the town but after fixing that we made good progress, pausing a couple of times for ice cream and then for a short look at Trolle Ljungby Slot.

We then pushed on to our overnight at Åhus – going via the Absolut Vodka buildings – not that we were interested – lol. A hearty dinner was had but only after we visited the beach where it seems most of the campsite were, um, camped out!

Next day was a short ride of about 35 miles down the coast to Simrishamn, it was hot again and Mad took us to see a nice chambered tomb at Havangsdösen. The next stop was a bit of a surprise, Kivik Kungagraven looks like just a pile of stones but after coffee and cake we went inside. Well even I could appreciate that this was special – just wait till I show Dad the pics!

We got caught in a cloudburst as we left but by the time we reached the campsite at Simrishamn it was bright and sunny again. It was quite early still so as we were going to stay a few days we made our way into the town to get some shopping and pick up a late lunch. Yeah, a Bratwurst hotdog hit the spot and then Mad sprung for ice cream too, all of which we consumed at the harbour kiosk.

We had a good look around the town then found the AVI to do our main shop – those places have so much stuff in them! On the way back to the tent we walked along the beach – this is the life huh?
