

The result was a train and bus trip to Ystad. In case you've been hiding under a rock, Ystad is where the Wallander books / TV series are set, a lively port for ferries to Estonia, Bornholm and Germany. We had a great day exploring the sights and looking for the Wallander locations. I think we found a few but it was fun anyway. Even the bus ride back to Simrishamn was good fun, trying to work out the announced names with the written versions!

We needed to start packing after dinner so we enjoyed the rest of the afternoon in town, doing the town museum and looking for presents. Then we did the feast thing again to use up our food supplies before a last walk on the beach.

The following morning we loaded everything up and made our way to the railway station. No riding today as originally planned but instead a couple of hours by train to take us back to Trelleborg. The ferry was of course overnight again so we had a full afternoon and evening to fill in the town.

Once we had the bike secured at the ferry port we headed towards town which was in the grip of their Palm Festival. The streets were full of partying Swedes, we enjoyed the atmosphere between visiting the various town museums, getting an earlyish dinner and making some last present purchases!

We finished the trip next day with a train ride back to Hamburg where we packed all the gear up ready to fly home in the morning. Then we took a nice stroll through central Hamburg before having Chinese for our dinner.

Quite some trip eh? It was really cool and apart from the punctures we both had a really great time.
